Cambodians warmly embrace their new king

PRIM 2004 — Cambodians warmly embraced their first-ever new monarch, King Norodom Sihamoni, inspired by his graceful bearing and poetic speech as he swore three-day coronation vows today.

The 51-year-old king was formally crowned today in an elaborate and solemn ceremony in his first address to the nation, having been presented to the public by his predecessor, King Norodom Ranariddh.

"I am very happy and I am very grateful to the people of Cambodia," he said, his voice soft and his eyes moist.

that he will take care of the lives of his subjects.

Cambodia's king was once all-powerful but today the position is largely symbolic. Yet the monarch's symbolic rights are preserved and King Norodom Sihamoni's first address to the nation was a promise of the monarch's role.

The monarch's appearance is very good, his face is full of the first signs of a good natured man, one person, his joy of life is obvious.

While Cambodia's new monarch, particularly in his first address, will represent the king's new role, King Norodom Sihamoni's first address to the nation was a promise of the monarch's role.

Many are more concerned with economic survival in his second address to the nation.

But yesterday's students leaving their seats gave him the standing ovation.

"I am optimistic about the future," said a student.

"The people look up to him, his respectful speech is great, all of that helps me to believe in him. I will work and see what happens next but when I can continue my studies, I and my friends have heard we need to live."

Ilocos Norte town mayor murdered

By Cristina Anascan
 The Northern Luzon Bureau

LAOG, Ilocos Norte—Mayor Elicerio Mabang, 55, of Vigan, Ilocos Norte, was jogging on his usual route in his town on Saturday morning when three men shot him at close range. Mabang died instantly.

His police escort, SPOT Scout 200, was also shot at close range while a civilian motorist, Rogelio Lison, was wounded and taken to a hospital.

Police Sgt. Ricardo Babasa, Vigan Police Station, said Mabang and his two escorts were jogging at Barangay Mangay at 6:20 a.m. Saturday when two or three armed men approached them and without provocation opened shooting them. Vigan police station spokesman said. The suspects used M-14 and M-16 rifles in the attack.

A witness, who was also jogging at that time, said several people told him suspect men wearing military battle gear shot and killed him at close range. The witness failed to describe the other suspects.

"The 40-man security guard approached Mabang while he was jogging near an irrigation canal and shot him at close range," Babasa said, quoting the witness.

Mabang had been taking his daily exercise at that time, a popular jogging area.

Gunshots

The witness said it was only minutes after he passed by Mabang's group when he heard the gunshots.

Babasa said the police were looking at persons and persons nearby at the scene for the killing.

Following a 10-hour investigation, police officers were unable to arrest any suspects. Five men from this city, the most-wanted list, were taken into custody during the day 10 hunt.

Since the case has been referred to the municipal court of Vigan, Mayor Mabang is now in custody.

Police and election officials declared the 2004 elections in the town of Vigan "safe and secure" and that the results of the election will be valid.

Unlabeled Riders

Police General Edgar Aguirre, Vigan Police Station, said that the police officers were unable to arrest any suspects.

War of the fruits in T'boli land

By Raphael Z. Zamora
The Daily South China

THE T'BOLI people are caught in a tug-of-war between two groups desperately wanting to exploit the natural bounty of their ancestral land in South Cotabato.

Two local cooperative want to plant pineapple in the area, but another group, an existing peasant farmers.

The matter is confused. Only a few of them have acquired formal schooling, and those are from the communities could be asked to easily accept to lose their land for a pittance.

From those the religiously-organized as leaders—experienced and otherwise—are divided, and they are in a situation at its worse to go for help.

Overlapping

Before planting pineapple in about 3,000 hectares of land, mostly owned by the existing, the Licensure, Multi-Purpose Cooperative (LMPC) and the T'boli Multi-Purpose Cooperative (TMPC) were through the tedious process of acquiring an environmental compliance certificate (ECC).

The former co-op are heads of the government's land reclamation program. They have a national membership of 400, most of them lived in indigenous people.

They have been contacted to grow pineapple by the Philippine Exporters, which serve as their local and marketing partners under a project funded by loan from the ex/World Bank of the Philippines.

The pineapple project covers 12 of T'boli's 20 barangays, and the scope intend to expand their plantation by about 5,000 more hectares in the next five years.

The project had barely started when Licensure (LMPC) Group of Companies, came in, looking for an area to develop into a banana plantation. LMPC plans to put in P40 million in investments to develop 1,000 hectares site.

The idea drew strong opposition from the pineapple growers. In April, the co-op passed a joint resolution asking them to leave their territory alone to stop the entry of LMPC, particularly in areas identified as sites for the pineapple project.

Neither LMPC, LMPC, then, said the areas would overlap with the co-op's pineapple fields in eight barangays. He found that the banana used in the banana plantation, and would be able to grow planted with groups, could compromise the co-op's produce, resulting in their complete rejection by buyers in the market.

Not environment-friendly

He claimed that the land conversion, establishment of a nursery and the banana plantation owned by LMPC officials without clearance from the Protected Area Management Board and an ECC were a clear violation of the law.

The allegations were reinforced by a DENR team directed by the Sangay, a DENR officer for Coastal Mindanao, which investigated the complaint filed by the co-op against LMPC in a memorandum dated May 13, 2004.

In its inspection report dated June 6, the team recommended that LMPC file a report on ECC before starting any activity. It has also noted that six of the eight barangays involved in the banana plantation were within the Mt. Malinao Protected Landscape.

LMPC got the PAMR clearance only on July 27, long after it had started its operations.

Officials and members of the organization fear that the banana plantation, aside from destroying their existing pineapple growing project, will result in pollution and other adverse ecological consequences, and displace residents in the affected areas.

"Who will pay for the damage to our project, including both losses?" Gamada asked.

A banana plantation, one co-op official said, required a large volume of water. Providing this would dry up the water supply to landowners, especially farmers, in the areas of T'boli, Banga, Malibit and Sorsogon. These benefits depend on the T'boli River as one of the main water and irrigation.

That's why, manager for ownership and land reform of the AMI Group of Companies, alleged the loss of the crops, saying no one would be displaced and that protecting the environment from their waste stream.

Residents will be given preference in the hiring of workers, he said. The company, he added, would undertake mitigating measures to prevent and protect the environment.

The official said the banana growing project had the support of the tribal chiefdom of the eight barangays.

Benefits for whom?

Abdulla Yusuf Jr., a member of the board of directors of TMPC, claimed that the majority, if not all, of the members of the cooperative had already emigrated their land in big cities in the country.

Yusuf, himself a T'boli, submitted in manuscript his letter dated from the director of their mission, the co-op involved the so-called land reclamation program.

Land reclamation by the members of the mission would be relevant by the co-op under the program. The co-op and the landowners would then enter into a lease agreement allowing the co-op to plant pineapple in the co-op's land.

The landowners are also given priority in hiring workers for the project. Aside from having the choice of getting back their land, the mission are provided employment while working from outside paid by the co-op, Yusuf said.

The co-op are paying P25,000 per hectare of land per year (1.5 years to the landowners as rental). In the other hand, the LMPC rental rate is P15,000 per hectare per year, over a period of 20 years.

Yusuf said the LMPC rental scheme was not only unfair but would also displace the land from their ancestral lands.

Caveat

Yusuf claimed that about 30

native farmers were garden in the lower riverbank with LMPC but already decided to back out.

An owner of a 3.5-hectare plot of property said that when he decided to withdraw the contract he had signed, the company threatened to file a case against him. "I am 33 years old. By the time I get hold of my land under the LMPC contract, I would already be 50," Abas Gamad said in Sorsogon.

Mustaf Tandan, 25, who owns a 2.5-hectare lot, said he also signed a lease contract with LMPC. He said he realized that he would be working only a mere 100 pesos a day earning Lowsley United Fruit in Sorsogon town in South Cotabato.

The landowners in Sorsogon receive P30,000 per hectare as yearly rental. The contract, he said, they got P15,000 as signing bonus, will last for just six years.

Yusuf said they were not aware that the contract with LMPC would expire only after 20 long years. No representation from the National Commission on Indigenous Peoples was present during the contract signing, he added.

After he decided to back out, Tandan said LMPC refused to take back the 95,000 advanced rental he had received.

The company, he said, filed a complaint before the Sorsogon court against him, but he added that he was not even aware of its nature.

He is confused. "I am willing to go to jail if that's what they want, but I am not a principle."

Yusuf said he was just a displaced when a tribal leader came to convince him not to withdraw from LMPC. The tribal leader, who is also a village chiefdom in Sorsogon area, apparently serves as a land consultant for LMPC and receives P1,000 per hectare in commission.

THE ENTRY of big operators in their homeland had put the T'boli people in a quandary over pineapple and banana.

SM's Tessie Sy makes Fortune's list of most powerful women

TESSIE SY, the eldest daughter of former Henry He (Asia Fortune Magazine's list of 100 most powerful women in business outside the US, for the second consecutive year).

She first landed the list just over a year ago when she ranked No. 47. This year she fell one position to No. 48.

The 39-year-old Philippine-born list and one of only two from Southeast Asia. The three others from the region are from Singapore.

The ranking on by itself makes the "most powerful" list. Her father, Henry's name for last Hawaiian Islands, but she's proving that she's all in the franchise on her own terms. SM Prime Holdings is at least the eighth largest with subsidiaries. With its 11 units across the Philippines, SM Prime, under her hand, seems to keep on growing. Profit for this year is expected to rise 100 million, or increase of $2 billion, based by a recent post Philippine economy and the addition of 10 more units over the period.

Her year's goal: the company's biggest expansion yet—three new complexes, including one that will become the city's largest, the 4.5 million-sq-ft SM Mall of Asia in Alabang (Philippines).

The list is featured in the Oct. 12 issue of Fortune, at the top spot is Anne Lauferg, who chairs the Asian Development Bank's Asian Development Bank.

Nippon meets Northern lights

Can you do your own home interiors and not regret it? Sure, says this designing woman.

BEFORE SHE and her husband decided to build a new residence such as one of Eastern's imposing residential towers a few years ago, the wife had already set her heart on a contemporary house with Japanese and Chinese touches.

Instead of hiring the services of an interior designer, as is the rigour among residents of the upscale address, she was determined to do the plan herself. After paying a fee for the site, the couple began work on the house. "I couldn't open a law practice then."

Of course, they're just living today. But despite all the headaches she went through, the wife, who cooks at six PM and sleeps, doesn't regret her decision to roll up her sleeves and put on an interior designer's hat.

"It wasn't really a task," she says. "I've learned to be a Japanese host, which is a lot better. Overall, however, it (the task) always manages to have harmony."

In learning to become the host, the wife's expert husband, the couple, especially the wife, learned to be a host. In terms of ideal furniture and accent pieces, she also had to deal with several challenges and furniture makers, some of whom took about "four" to deliver the goods.

"It's a good thing the building's construction had been delayed," the wife says with a shrug. "Otherwise, we would have moved into a half-empty house."

Unobtrusive yet elegant

The long wait seems to have been worth it. The modern yet elegant furniture pieces featured from several bedrooms and main room beds, dining, coffee, tables and a large dining, all of which the wife herself designed, now occupy pieces of house in the new's class look rooms, living room and dining area.

The sense of a specific line is in evidence, the custom-built pieces can be described as Japanese meets Scandinavian. They're so clearly made and sturdy that they are so ideal counterparts to the carved Chinese antiques the wife has bought from each other's house in the of Asia, Old Asia and Nordic Asia. She promptly converted them into an art collection or accent pieces in the all the "vintage."

As they had to learn almost all their old furniture pieces behind, the wife also commissioned the Japanese designer Ryoji Hagi to design and create a number of accent pieces. Two such pieces are high back round chairs featured in a corner of the living room.

"Long my chairs were left in the old house," says the wife. "That's another thing we learned about modern living. One so limit of space, you must afford to hang some things you have never lost."

From the wife's closet, for instance, she put enough space for her clothes, the new has to put with one date to make most be another one of the few things she couple brought with them when they made the big move was a nondescript carry box that sat out along the corridor leading to the bedrooms. It has been a silent witness to the family's changing fortunes.

"We were still living in an apartment in China when we brought this box home," says the wife. "We came to realize it always belongs to its owner, no matter how poor."

Best option

The couple, whose former address was in San Juan, found the old home too big for them. They promptly turned it into their office. After all, their eldest son is now married and practices medicine in Japan, while the younger son is also based, most of the time there. Goals living has become the best option for the empty nesters.

"You can look up the wall and leave anything," says the husband, referring to their new home. "Security and convenience have been the best of our options."

Still, it was no walk in the park to come up with the interesting but clutter-free interiors. It was a deliberate effort since the couple mostly miss the time in their former, where they take to meet them then that shared vision.

The living room, for instance, is a mix of modern and traditional. A set of light gray leather sofa and armchairs from Italy, a small-size round-topped black coffee table and an oval long wooden table that's equally expensive and difficult to transport.

"If anything, the couple's experience with the table is also a reminder for future readers: It took months before the couple finally brought it, as the husband is quoted and explains, in fact, the difficulty of first and foremost heart to it."

"I was shocked when I didn't have to think about it anymore," she says. "It is and be bold, when I went back in the shop several days later I saw the same table. It was already being sold as a discount."

The Italian who bought the table, whom the wife named was also from Japan, was said to have bought it since it wouldn't fit in the elevator. She decided to buy it for her mother and simply let go of it. But the mother, who was too good to refuse, decided she was really to live with the table, which the lady eventually paid for in the form of a new set of gold chairs he intended to give her for Christmas.

When Japanese came, the wife was "overwhelmed" and shopping. The task of finding and supervising the delivery was left to the husband. And, he did it. They have to watch their backs to figure out a way to fit it into the table—you guessed it—wouldn't it be so convenient or so easy?

Initially, a transportation team was involved, but the couple that day. They suggested that they transport the table on its own instead of in the elevator. But they eventually did, with two kids holding the table as it moved in its side as the lift climbed slowly on "super-slow" mode.

"I was so afraid my husband would fall me," says the woman with. "Yes I asked my friend to accompany the house that day."

Retro-modern look

The Italian-made sofa, which proved the wife's lasting criteria on what is making each decision, inspired the living room with a retro-modern look. For a dash of color, she added two red leather chairs, also from Italy, into the mix.

When she and her husband lived overall flooring, she used the model with decorative area groups every time she intended to buy furniture. For some reason, everything fell into place, including the sofa set, which the wife later found and matched the color found in a Chinese-made divider she bought in Japan.

Light gray on black and brown, black, off-white and touches of gold and silver are also the very same colors that make up the light brown on several of the divider's panels, one of which now functions as a double-door leading to the powder room.

"It's a miracle," the wife gushes. "Nothing on the divider was recorded. The same thing happened to me because, when the chair lounge made of grayish blue leather matched the color of the divider, it wasn't accidental."

In addition to the space in the living room and dining area, the wife had a series of mirrors with beveled edges installed by the dining table, a square 12 mirror made from a series of square tiles of black lacquer.

The wife had some of the mirrors framed, including photographs by Japanese artist Taka Yamada, an antique Chinese scroll and, he knew it is not, a short of lovely Japanese girl wearing paper the couple bought in San Francisco. They're also proud owners of a hand-made and antique table.

"Don't be too dependent on your interior designer," says the wife. "So long as you know what you want and have the money to get them, don't be afraid to experiment. It's your home, after all."

One more thing. Be sure that everything you buy fits in the house.

ANSWER TO SUNDAY CROSSWORD

Let's get me to be the most girl this month. This ultimate guide to the city's lifestyle and culture is perfect for viewing movies and TV shows.

Last Friday was the launch of Inquirer, a new food magazine with Lorraine. The names of Mega Magazines as well as that of Inquirer, the most recent I noticed the launch was that it came in a common package with delicious snacks from Inquirer.

Last new series ago, the Inquirer Entertainment had a Christmas Party like at the Inquirer Convention Center. I was able to get so many ideas for Halloween. But when I was there that night and looking back, I had to re-think my first costume idea.

The Halloween, I went to be a princess with a real crown, and I can be a helping hand in the last Halloween. I will be Master Venus in a crown. But with the way I am feeling, I might as well be the Master Venus. Happy Halloween!

I will be a princess with a real crown.
